The day the grid goes down

Fear of EMP / Source of IMP

There's been lots of hyperbolic talk about the potential of a terrorist attack against the States where EMP (electro-magnetic pulse) is used to fry the power grid and what the after effect would be if the world of IT (Information Technology) as we know it should suddenly.....'in the twinkling of an eye' disappear.

Well, what indeed would that look like? Some doomsday prognostications put loss of human life at 95% within 1 year. Wow! Are our machines that important to us? Then we don't have to fear AI (Artificial Intelligence). The machines have already taken over.

'We all want to see the future.' Harry said in his Easter Sunday sermon. The Age to Come. What does it look like and are we in it?

Maybe its time to talk about it - The Age of the Glory....of the Resurrection, of the Outshining.....of the Parousia - the Presence. Because we are living in the period of the Watch....of the preparation. But many of us dont seem to recognize that these ages and seasons aren't chronological but mythological. ('Mythological' not 'mythical'. 'Mythological' infers the logic informing the system is myth or story not time.)

I can see why many might not understand. All ages with God are NOW and which one we live in is a result of our 'apprehending that for which we have been apprehended'. Right now there are communities of humans living in the Stone Age and right now there are communities of humans living with Enoch in the Age of the Glory. That you have not noticed either in your space is not a function of our being time-bound but culture-bound.

There are gates of Glory opened up in this island now. As the flood of the Spirit affords us greater opportunity, let us literally soak it all in. Practice the Presence. Because what Dakes and others see as a future event has always been a dimension open to those who will walk with God. Even now, the gates are open and there are those Secret ones who traverse back and forth at will.

Not much more can be said now except that we know the machines to be a counterfeit. The Glory is the real.

All Information, Mobility and Power belong unto the God of Glory. Amen.

The Fisherman's silver coin

By modern standards, Peter's attitude to money was decidedly negative.

When was the last time you saw rotting gold? Heaven itself is metaphorically described as having streets paved with gold because of the well established stability of this pure metal. Poets, mystics and financiers from time immemorial it seems, have appreciated the durable properties of this precious metal and appropriated it as a symbol of eternity - that which cannot perish.

Of all philosophers of which I am aware, only Peter could come up with the absurd description of "gold which perishes even though refined by fire". 1 Peter 1:7 Not only does he abjure the sacred metal...but even in its purest form, he maintains that it is a corruptible, fleeting, temporal, perishable thing.

In doing so, he goes against the grain of all sacred scripture, and most if not all literary traditions (not to mention economic theories, praxes and maybe even science itself) which equate gold, especially purest gold with longevity and reliability.

'Gold' - the closest thing to 'God' - just add the 'l' for luster.

What is Peter's problem?

And this is not some one time utterance one can pass off as emotional fervor. Peter's famous one liner "Silver and gold have I none but such as I have I give to thee" must be personally embarrassing to every Pope that has had to assume responsibility (supposedly in Peter's name) for the Institute for the Works of Religion (Vatican Bank). But this negative comparison of money and faith runs throughout the Petrine narrative in scripture.

I mean we get the simple fisherman that he was. That he would have felt ridiculously uncomfortable in an Armani suit. That if Oprah gave his wife a makeover, he would probably see her more as whore than queen. We find in the third chapter of his first letter, evidence of his preferred fashion line – a preference for incorruptible and a revulsion of glitter which colored his entire worldview. Regardless of what he says, Sarai could really throw down on the cat walk. She knew how to capture the eyes of kings. Abram, wuss that he was, couldn't handle this hottie, but for a merciful God, rescuing him and her more than once from the folly of her flirtations. But Peter saw the world through the eyes of a simple fisherman.

Peter outdoes even Jesus himself, who although was known to make some rather disheartening pronouncements on both mammon itself and those who possess the filthy lucre, at least seemed a little sympathetic to the wealthy and had more than one or two rich friends.

Peter's surly attitude to the baptized believer, Simon, definitely shows up his underlying attitude to money and his perception of its relationship with the things of the spirit. What could Peter have seen that would make him to constantly negatively contrast the gold of this world with the anointing of that which is to come at His Appearance / Presence / Manifestation?

For those who don't get Peter's sour attitude to Simon Magu, what value would it have been for his money to perish with him? (At least in the case of Ananias and Sapphira, the churches' coffers recouped some of the estate before the anointing killed them.) Why would anyone want the man's money itself to perish with him? What purpose would be served?

What cataclysmic vision informs Peter's pronouncements on 'perishable gold'?
What kind of calamity could cause such a melt down of the most stable elements?
And what is the Rock of Refuge against that hellish day?

Peter's vision of the day of the Lord (2 Peter 3) was so compelling, apparently compromise for him was impossible...even in paying taxes - all his treasure was stored up in Christ. The only safe place amidst the burning.

Lovest thou me more than these? Selah.

All wealth and wisdom belong to the God of Glory.

Get with the program

Each morning, I press one button on my computer keyboard and instantly, I hear a voice and see a face if I wish from someone oceans away. But I can send that person documents, money, link with others on distant continents in conference, read the news from Nigeria, Spain, Toronto, transact business....indeed the portal of this PC has fulfilled its promise in giving me a window to the world.

The programming behind that one button which on my keyboard says "ENTER", which allows me access of view and voice to almost anywhere on earthand a growing amount of heavenly vistas, is massive.

Consider the layers of infrastructure both in coding and connections required for this massive architecture to function. Satellites in heaven. Wiring on earth. Coded software...etc.

Consider the passion of all the pioneers that pressed the frontiers of knowledge, technology and possibility to give this gift to man. It is not happenstance that a man called Gates stands at the forefront of giving us these windows..

At one point in my life, God began giving me such voluminous information, that I had to find ways of encoding it and interlinking it in order to contain, communicate and utilize it. My communication, for some, became increasingly abstract and remote - cryptic to those unaware of the depths of the roots of each symbol, or breadth of each parabolic association and interlinkage.

However, when God has finished his architecture - and he is building a building in us. A House of holy Spirit (Divine Consciousness). He is producing a Christ in each of us, that when fully functional, will exceed the first model in effectiveness and power. It would have been more than wonderful for the servant to attain the level of the master, but God being the 'too much' God that he is, decided to surpass Himself in greater works through the Man-child. What manner of Love! Hallelujah!

Therefore let us give ourselves assiduously to study - for the season of student-hood is preparation for mature functionality in the grand purpose and promise of father..... far above human expectation, dream or consideration. For I tell you, this network of windows will soon fail and the network of Holy Spirit that will replace it far exceeds the capacity and capabilities of its predecessor.

That Rock on the mountain is the Rock we were hewn from. Forget not your orientation....or risk being smashed to pieces with the unstable idol that is about to come crashing down to earth as the twin towers, along with every symbol of human pride.

We open these Glory Gates now with heads lifted up. Even so, come swiftly Lord Jesus.

Enter. Amen.
